SUPPORTING INFORMATION

Part one: Please address the core/essential 'who I am' skills, experience and competencies required using real examples where possible and tell us in what ways you are a good match for the role. You will need to refer to the 'How to Apply' section of the job description in your response.

In my previous organisation, I worked within our small IT team, reporting directly while also liaising with several outside sister organisations. As the sole software developer/systems administrator, I frequently mentored and gave software training to less skilled employees. I wanted to ensure the company's future was in good hands, in the event of my absence. I aspired to reflect the same working values I prided myself for doing in my colleagues and as a result of this, our productivity had increased significantly and overall disruptions from lack of technical knowledge would subsequently fall. One of my strengths lies in communication; I've consistently delivered resolution windows, downtime notices, and troubleshooting updates to stakeholders in clear, accessible language, regardless of their technical background. I take pride in translating complex technical information into terms that are easy to understand and actionable. I've also supported design processes by presenting evidence-based recommendations to relevant parties, ensuring proposed solutions align with key objectives and are clearly communicated to both technical and non-technical audience. I'm driven by a strong desire to understand fundamentally how various systems interconnect in business environments. In addition to this I view myself as a technically minded person and this coupled with my curiosity has led me to contribute to a variety of open-source software projects; in which I was an active contributor - auditing my own and other contributors code. This fed my yearning for knowledge as I would learn innumerable lessons from working with online collaborators; in particular different approaches to debugging and refactoring code.

Part two: Please provide us with any further supporting information that you feel will benefit your application. You may want to reference the values and behaviours sections of the role description.

In my previous organisation, due to our very small operational scale and other constraining factors - I took it upon myself to become highly trained in not only software development but also various, technologies unfamiliar to me at the time. I'm meticulous when it comes to documentation of any kind. I have authored several software manuals and contributed to open-source software documentation. I pride myself as a determined self-learner but also as an individual who highly values being under the tutelage/mentorship of a senior colleague. I believe these strengths would allow me to not only contribute meaningfully to Prostate Cancer UK but also allow myself to be open-minded and resilient enough to tough out any challenges I would experience if I was offered the Junior Developer role
